

As printed in the Washington Times, Cleaning rivers' 'bathtub ring', April 1, 2005.
Photos by J.M. Eddins, Jr., Washington Times.

The swollen Potomac River overflowed onto Hains Point, bringing trash from upstream, illustrating the need to clean the Potomac, as well as the Anacostia.

Julie Rowan, 22, of Burlington, Iowa, carried her find from the Potomac River on the first day of the Capital River Relief effort.

Geoff Manis, of Rock Island, Ill., hauled trash with a crew of Earth Conservation Corp. volunteers on the Maryland side of the Potomac River yesterday as part of the Capital River Relief project to clean up the Potomac and Anacostia rivers.